the signs of the times. The present one at soul.

What remains of it represents but a miserable faction able only to do evil.

It has command of armies, but is an administration so blind that it can suppose home will rule armies. The interest of officers and soldiers is at home. Their essential interest is there, and proclamations and organical interest is there, and proclamations and organical interest is there, and proclamations and organical interest is the soldiers in the soldiers in the soldiers is at home. Their essential interest is there, and proclamations and organical interest is the soldiers in the sold interest is there, and proclamations and orders, which the heart of man revolts at, will be evaded by armies.

This Administration has united its enemies and divided its friends, and will die of imbeeility. No Administration ever had a higher mission; no party ever had an op- agel to attend. portunity to demonstrate its power and statesmanship. No Administration and no party ever so signally failed. They have given to party what belonged to their country, and demonstrated to the world their incapacity to actup to the great occasion. The intelligence of the masses has seen the failire, the lamentable incapacity, and has givn their verdict against it.

The cherished object of the masses is to restore the Union. They see, too, that the great object in the way is the Administration and its party, and in restoring the Union it is indispensable to remove this obstacle, and it shall be removed.

This country presents the singular specta cle of being ruled by two factions, one in power at Washington and the other in power at Richmond; one a theoretical despotism and partially practical; the other a practical despotism and partially theoretical.

The masses of the people are the victims of the powers they have allowed to grow up. It is the interest of these powers to proscente the irrepressible conflict; it is the interest of the masses to stop it, and restore the Union of their fathers. "No compro nise!" shouts one of these factions. "No ompromise!" cchoes the other; and yet the common sense of mankind knows that the Union was made by concessions and compromises, and must be restored by the same means. Thanks to a Democratic North. They have as erted their right to discuss the whole matter; and the day is coming when the South will do it, notwithstanding the grinding despotism, aided by for a time these troubles.
